

American College of Neuropsychopharmacology

SUBJECT: Neuropsychopharmacology to Be Published by Elsevier Beginning January 2027

Dear Colleagues,

The American College of Neuropsychopharmacology (ACNP) is pleased to announce that Neuropsychopharmacology, the College's flagship scientific journal, will be published by Elsevier effective January 1, 2027.

This follows a competitive review of publishing partners on behalf of the American College of Neuropsychopharmacology (ACNP), which identified Elsevier as the strongest partner to support the journal's continued growth.

For subscription inquiries or if your organization is interested in subscribing to Neuropsychopharmacology, please contact Elsevier here.

The assessment considered the reach and discoverability of published research, support for authors and editors, and the long-term stewardship of a journal that has served the field since 1976. Elsevier emerged from that process as the strongest partner for the journal's next chapter.

Neuropsychopharmacology publishes clinical and basic science on the molecular, cellular, physiological, and psychological properties of the central nervous system, with particular attention to the identification of new targets for therapeutic development. The College's aim in this partnership is to extend the reach of that work across the institutions and databases where the field's readership already works.

This transition applies to Neuropsychopharmacology only. NPP-Digital Psychiatry and Neuroscience, the College's open-access companion journal, remains with Springer Nature through 2027 and will transfer on January 1, 2028.

There is no change to the journal's editorial independence, its scope, or its peer review standards. Further information for authors and reviewers will be provided in advance of the transfer.

Questions may be directed to the ACNP office at acnp@acnp.org.

Sincerely,

Deanna Barch, Ph.D.
